Why should you do company-wide volunteering events?

Company-wide events create a massive buzz across your organisation, but there are many other benefits to getting all of your employees involved in a volunteering day.

Showcases corporate purpose as a priority and demonstrates a commitment to investing in social impact across the business

Breaks down hierarchies, offers team building opportunities and helps to create empathetic leaders

Improves employee well-being and satisfaction, and creates a shared sense of purpose

Gives you an opportunity for immediate impact and reporting even before the end of the volunteering event

Company conferences

Showcase your commitment to your corporate purpose by using your company conference to deliver volunteering events. It's cost effective and engages a captive team, while maximising limited time to boost social impact.

Five ways you can drive social impact results at your company conference

In your conference room

- Skills-based: such as interview skills for students; Community business forum (strategic charity workshop) run at your conference
- Practical: such as collating hygiene packs for refugees, or children's activity packs for hospitals

Half day offsite nearby

- Practical activities like supporting local charities with gardening, painting, maintenance.
- Working at a local playground to prepare the site for half term.
- Or a morning school workshop e.g. Healthy Eating Plate session

Customer testimonial:

"This really reminds a large group of leaders in our company of the tangible value we can give to others. A great cause and brilliant to protect the time to do this well."
